LESSON OVERVIEW

What should students know/do by the end of this week's lessons?

Students will examine how film posters promote a film by signalling genre, presenting characters and stars and creating audience interest. They will analyse how image, wording and layout combine to address a likely audience. Students will then design a poster for a defined fictional brief, annotate their promotional choices and make a reasoned improvement following peer feedback.

End-of-Week Assessment/Check: How will you know they got it?

Teacher questioning, class discussion, analysis of worked examples and the completed independent activities. Check that students use accurate terminology, select specific evidence and explain how a choice creates meaning or addresses an audience. Review the written, visual or practical work alongside its annotations, and use the final checks in both lessons to identify the next skill requiring practice.

LESSON SLOTS - TUESDAY AND FRIDAY

Lesson	Date	Learning Objective	The Lesson Flow	Differentiation
1	27 October 2026	By the end of this lesson, students will be able to analyse how film posters promote a film and communicate genre and audience appeal.	H: Display two film posters with their titles temporarily hidden. Ask what students can infer about genre, characters and likely audience, and which visual or written detail provides the strongest clue. ID: Introduce the film poster as a promotional text. Explain the roles of the main image, title, tagline, stars, colour, layout and release information. Discuss how these choices work together to create expectations and attract interest, while distinguishing a supported audience inference from a personal preference. WD: Annotate a teacher-selected age-appropriate poster using the textbook's film-promotion approach. Identify a prominent feature, explain its suggested meaning and connect it to audience	Support: Provide a poster-analysis checklist and labelled examples of title, image and tagline. Model one complete entry and encourage students to discuss a possible meaning with a partner before writing independently. Extension: Students compare alternative posters for one fictional film or propose two versions for different audiences. They justify how the image, wording or emphasis would need to change.

			appeal. Compare a second poster to show how a different arrangement or image changes the emphasis. YD: Students analyse two posters in a feature-meaning-audience grid and write a comparative paragraph. They identify at least one shared convention and one significant difference. Each student then proposes a tagline for a fictional film and explains how it supports the intended genre and audience. C: Ask students to justify an audience claim using two poster features. Check that their response explains promotional choices rather than simply retelling the film's plot or stating whether they like the design.
2	30 October 2026	By the end of this lesson, students will be able to design a film poster for a defined audience and justify its promotional choices.	H: Present a fictional film brief with a stated genre and audience. Ask which features should be most prominent and which choices might confuse the audience about the film being promoted. ID: Explain how a design brief guides decisions about image, typography, colour, layout and tagline. Discuss hierarchy and readability so that the title and main message are clear. Review the use of original or teacher-provided assets and explain that the aim is a justified promotional design rather than a finished commercial campaign. WD: Sketch a poster for a fictional school mystery, identifying the main image, title and supporting information. Explain each decision against the brief	Support: Provide a simple layout template, an approved image bank and a design checklist. Offer a choice of two fictional briefs. Help students establish a clear main image and title before adding supporting information. Extension: Students develop an alternative version for a different audience and compare the required changes. They evaluate a trade-off between visual impact, readability and the amount of information included.

			and demonstrate how too many competing elements can weaken emphasis. Model an annotation linking a visible design choice to its intended audience effect. YD: Students create a paper or digital poster for the agreed fictional film. They annotate at least four choices and explain how the poster signals genre and addresses the defined audience. A partner reviews the design against the brief; students revise one feature and record the reason for the change. C: Review the poster and annotations together. Ask students which choice most clearly addresses the audience and what changed after feedback. Check that the design meets the brief and that explanations refer to visible features.

MATERIALS NEEDED FOR THE WEEK

- GCSE Media Studies for AQA (Heinemann): Unit 1 Film: How films are promoted, film posters
- Teacher computer, display screen and speakers where audio is used
- Age-appropriate teacher-selected extracts or teacher-prepared fictional media texts
- Prepared analysis worksheet, evidence grid or production brief
- Paper, pencils, storyboard or design templates, and whiteboard markers
- Classroom computers and save folders; camera or approved image bank when required
- Lesson success criteria and teacher observation checklist; check school-event arrangements and reschedule any displaced task

END-OF-WEEK REFLECTION

- What worked well?

- What flopped or confused students?

- What needs to be re-taught or adjusted next week?
