LESSON OVERVIEW

What should students know/do by the end of this week's lessons?

Students will explore television genres and the ways title sequences introduce a programme's setting, tone and identity. They will analyse images, sound, editing and graphics to identify the expectations created for an audience. Students will then develop a close analysis of a television opening, explaining how several choices work together and supporting their interpretation with specific moments from the sequence.

End-of-Week Assessment/Check: How will you know they got it?

Teacher questioning, class discussion, analysis of worked examples and the completed independent activities. Check that students use accurate terminology, select specific evidence and explain how a choice creates meaning or addresses an audience. Review the written, visual or practical work alongside its annotations, and use the final checks in both lessons to identify the next skill requiring practice.

LESSON SLOTS - TUESDAY AND FRIDAY

Lesson	Date	Learning Objective	The Lesson Flow	Differentiation
1	3 November 2026	By the end of this lesson, students will be able to identify television genre conventions and explain the purposes of a title sequence.	H: Show two short teacher-selected television openings or prepared still sequences. Ask what viewers can infer before the main programme begins and which clues suggest the type of programme. ID: Introduce television genres through recurring settings, characters, formats and audience expectations. Explain the title sequence as a combination of images, music, graphics and names that introduces a programme and establishes its identity. Distinguish the opening's promotional role from a summary of everything that happens in an episode. WD: Analyse a fictional school-drama opening using a feature-and-inference table. Identify location images, the title style and the music, then	Support: Provide a genre word bank and an opening-analysis table divided into image, sound, graphics and inference. Replay short sections and model one connection before asking students to identify a different feature. Extension: Students explain how a title sequence could blend conventions from two genres. They discuss how familiarity with a recurring opening may help build programme recognition.

			explain how they suggest setting, tone and likely narrative concerns. Compare a contrasting opening to show how genre expectations shape the choices. YD: Students classify two openings and support each genre judgement with three features. They identify what each title sequence reveals and what it withholds. Each student writes a short explanation of how one combination of image, sound and typography establishes an expectation for the audience. C: Ask students to distinguish a genre convention from a feature used by only one programme. Check that their explanation links a title-sequence detail to an inference about tone, setting or audience.
2	6 November 2026	By the end of this lesson, students will be able to analyse how a television opening combines technical choices to introduce a programme to an audience.	H: Return to an opening with its sound removed. Ask what can still be inferred and which expectations become less certain when the soundtrack is unavailable. ID: Explain how an analysis should connect camera choices, editing, sound and graphics rather than treating them as unrelated features. Discuss the order of information and how an opening may position viewers toward a place or character. Remind students that audience effects need evidence and may vary between viewers. WD: Model a close analysis of the first three moments of a prepared opening. Record the observable details, explain an inference and show	Support: Provide a partly completed timeline, still images from the opening and sentence starters. Encourage students to focus on a few significant moments rather than attempting to record every cut or sound. Extension: Students propose a change to the opening and explain how it would alter expectations. They compare their reading with a plausible alternative and assess which details support each.

			how the next moment confirms or complicates it. Demonstrate a paragraph that refers to both image and sound and supports a judgement about the programme's tone. YD: Students complete a timeline of a selected television opening and write two analytical paragraphs. They refer to at least three technical choices and explain how these establish genre or audience expectations. Partners identify an unsupported claim, and students improve it using more precise evidence. C: Ask students to explain which moment gives the clearest clue about the programme and why. Check that the completed analysis uses accurate terms and links a combination of choices to meaning.

MATERIALS NEEDED FOR THE WEEK

- GCSE Media Studies for AQA (Heinemann): Unit 2 Television: Title sequences and television genres
- Teacher computer, display screen and speakers where audio is used
- Age-appropriate teacher-selected extracts or teacher-prepared fictional media texts
- Prepared analysis worksheet, evidence grid or production brief
- Paper, pencils, storyboard or design templates, and whiteboard markers
- Classroom computers and save folders; camera or approved image bank when required
- Lesson success criteria and teacher observation checklist

END-OF-WEEK REFLECTION

- What worked well?

- What flopped or confused students?

- What needs to be re-taught or adjusted next week?
